Give Breast Tumors the Deep Freeze

A new removal method for benign breast tumors may make surgery obsolete. With Cryo-ablation, which has been approved by the FDA for removing benign tumors, a surgeon places a small probe filled with Argon gas, a freezing agent, into the tumor. The Argon forms an iceball which destroys the lesion. Women with these tumors often have them removed because they cause pain or deformation of the breast, according to Nashville breast surgeon Dr. Pat Whitworth, one of the first doctors to do the procedure. Studies are under way regarding malignant breast tumors. Ask your doctor for more information.
